

cence are always so; but innocence frequently vanishes with infancy, and loveliness takes wing at the same time. The young Princess was an orphan; and a beneficent fairy, whose name was Lidoriana, undertook the care of her education. Elmina did not know she was a fairy; but she loved Lidoriana as a friend, and honoured her as her mother.

The